

Stahl, P. H.

Consangvinitate fictivă. Câteva exemple balcanice / Fictitious consanguinity. A few balcanic instances

Abstract:

The study is looking for the way in which biologic-blood element is becoming an important criterion of social organization. Besides, the consanguinity is not only biological, it have social characteristics that are peculiar in determinate social context. In this study is surprised the dimensions of consanguinity in balcanic societies, the way in which consanguinity is a criterion of social organization, the convection and construction of identity, the propriety access. Therewith are analyze the „fictive consanguinities“, that is unbiological, the way in which local ideologies are becoming real consanguinities, with important social implications.