Abstract:

Differences between sexes have always existed. They are natural. As a consequence of their being exaggerated over long periods of time, even nowadays in certain geographical spaces, they have degenerated into a real woman-discrimination, residing in the minimizing of her social role and, starting with this very point, the applying of an appropriate treatment. Nowadays, within the democratic, civilized societies, the issue concerning the relations between sexes, women's rights being equal to men's has been solved, at least at the level of principle. Concerning this dramatic unifying, this removal of the differences between sexes, is it by any chance of use for the future society?
