Abstract

This article represents an experimental study of interpersonal relation between preadolescents and their parents. The following questionnaires were used: ADOR and “The parent’s attitude”. The results show a significant relation between parental attitudes and children’s behavior. The founding of present research support the idea that a difficult relation between children and their parents is caused by the inconsequence, contradictions between positive interest and hostility, directivity and autonomy.

Keywords: preadolescents, acceptance, rejection, symbiosis, directivity, hostility, control, inconsequence, autonomy
